NIH Commits To I-Corps Training

Congressman Dan Lipinski announces a new collaboration be-tween the National Science Foundation's Innovation Corps program and the National Institutes of Health that will use the entrepreneurial best minds from Silicon Valley and venture capitalists to teach entrepreneurship to NIH researchers.

This will help turn lab research into medical innovations that save lives and save money while leading to economic growth, job creation, and a greater return on taxpayers' investment in scientific research. As the top Democrat on the Research and Technology Subcommittee of the House Science, Space, and Technology Committee, Rep. Lipinski has played an important role in bringing these organizations together and using his leadership position to encourage program participation.

The Congressman was an early supporter of the I-Corps program and was responsible for including language in two NSF authorization bills before the House Science Committee that specifically authorized the activities of I-Corps I-Corps teaches the "Lean LaunchPad" method for starting a business which focuses on talking to as many potential customers as possible, pivoting in response to the resulting insights, building low-cost prototypes to get customer feedback, and constantly adapting.

NIH Institutes that will participate in the initial phase of this collaborative effort are the National Cancer Insti-tute National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke and National Center for Advancing Translational Sci
