Opinions Change

By Dr. R. Pletsch

There seems to be some change in some of the politics. An apparent change can be seen in a few recent court cases. These are a few examples about out of state cases.
They don't always make the news in the press here. Some commentators here. Some commentators believe it is when a decision does not fit the narrative of the political party in control.

Here are a few examples: The plea deal arranged by Hunter Biden's law team was turned down by a Democratic judge from his home state of Delaware. She ruled the deal improper and did not accept it. Therefore, it was cancelled. After the initial shock, several politicians from both parties agreed. In a case in the county courts of Pennsylvania, they ruled that a mother had a right by state law to be given state records dealing with COVID, though they had not been revealed. The Democratic judge not only ruled that the records be released but fined the county for the bad faith nature of the government who brought a lawsuit against

I believe both parties are recognizing that very few elected officials actu-ally believe 100% of the party line. Many issues are complicated and there are very few that are 100% in favor or against a

People are this way when left alone to make up their own minds as they synthesize new data, combine it with their life experiences and have time to hear other opinions. This is healthy and hopefully after you have made your choice on a subject, you are not faced with the negative response some are given by those around you.
