

Much of the World Looks to the Right

By Dr. R. Pletsch

The world is undergoing a slow move to the right. Their press has been less critical of the U.S. since our Presidential election. It appears that many nations are glad of the expected stability of the new U.S. administration. I have several friends who still hold to the idea that Europe hates Americans. Some of which believe in saving tree frogs instead of humans.

While any of us can look at the situations and concoct our own reasons and results. However, it has been a whole long time since the press has expressed ideas that they have noted lately. Many nations are looking to strong responses to blame attacks on their sovereignty.

What is considered their sovereignty changes from person to person and many can be reputed. One that you will probably recall was when Iran held the American Embassy 444 days and you may have forgotten, it appears that most of the West that the U.S. election brought that to an end.

English papers in Europe noted that our mayor lost a 50 - 0 vote to increase property tax. Regardless of where you stand on the political spectrum it is hard for anyone in the world to see this as normal. There are many other items that you might come up with, just do an internet search to help you draw your own conclusions. One fact that is hard to deny is that Putin's support can be considered weaker than when they first invaded Ukraine. Once again the U.S. press has not written much of the fact that the North Korean military has sent at least 8,000 troops to fight for the Russians in Ukraine. I hope this helps you understand why in the last election so many Americans decided that it was better to use American oil and not make aggressive regimes get rich. As always, I hope those of you reading this article can use it in a way to understand the situation better.
