

Unexpected Consequences

By Dr. R. Pletsch

As a former administrator, I find "helicopter parents" as annoying and nonproductive. They do not let their children grow in a manner that will help them prepare for life. I have had adults tell me the world is so dangerous. Well, FBI stats say, based on population, that is not true. One problem is too much news on TV. They have all these channels that time must be filled. Now a child reports someone asked them into a car 50 miles away and they send the news crew. In the day, the family took a look and there was seldom even a police report filed.

An unexpected consequence is in preventing bullying. Some are so hyper aware that they won't let it happen to their kid, so it teaches their kid is that they are being backed by a big person. When that happens you do not get bullied, but you can get away with it. I have had several students who were guarded by their helicopter parents that became the bullies because they could pick someone who did not have someone backing them up. This is the same excuse we hear of many middle schoolers how they get involved in gangs. They want a big person to back them up.

While the stats cannot be obtained except through anecdotal records, here are a few more unintended consequences. Father Andrew Greeley in a Sun-Times article some years ago wrote that he noticed the peace movement caused the Viet Nam war to last longer, because after they had large peace marches, the polls showed increased support for the war. Similar to this, is that when they have these anti-gun rallies gun sales go way up. A common reply from students is that my dad wanted to get the guns before they became illegal. Some stats say there are millions more guns than there were ten years ago.

Watch the news, statistically President Trump's approval rating keeps improving while the mainstream press and the Russian investigation keep up their attack. Some journalists have stated that many people are just fed up.

I would say these are just a few, but I believe the greatest example that has affected all of us was the persecution of the early Christians. While large number of Christians were killed, as you know, Christianity has grown to well over a billion. Now that was unexpected by the Romans.

Library Promotes Summer Learning

The Chicago Public Library launched the 2018 Rahm's Readers Summer Learning Challenge which requires Earth Explorers to read 20 minutes a day, participate in STEAM activities and investigate earth systems science, environmental literacy and climate resiliency.

Students will participate in building terrarium landfills, live trout raising tanks, and play-based learning around the issues of recycling and renewable resources. Programming will also include science experiments, singalongs, story times, in-branch animal visits, concerts and art projects. To see a list of events, programs and at-home activities, visit chipublib.org/summer.

Rahm's Readers was designed to prevent "summer slide" where children lose up to three months to math and science learning during summer months if they do not remain engaged. Through CPL's strategic partnership with the Museum of Science and Industry, the Summer Learning Challenge embeds STEAM programming as a vital track of learning in the summer months. Program participants are encouraged to engage in various critical thinking, creation and design activities to encourage creativity, problem solving and persistence.

All registered participants ages 0-5 will receive a new book donated by KPMG. Kids ages 6-13 will be able to select 12 free books, courtesy of Bernie's Book Bank through support from William Blair during Community Days at 10 CPL branches across the city. CPL will participate in National Summer Learning Day on July 12th with celebrations in every branch, as well as a visit from Bryan Collier, illustrator of this year's official book of Summer Learning Day "Trombone Shorty," written by Troy Andrews.

A summer program titled, Imagine Doing More, challenges teens to think about how they can impact the quality of their environment by investigating, learning and creating an action plan. To learn more about self-directed activity guides, events and more, visit chipublib.org/ImagineAtCPL.
