New Law For "Flash Mobs"
Criminals who use social media to organize "flash mobs" to carry out crimes may face double trouble thanks to tougher penalties under a new law sponsored by State Rep. Silvana Tabares. Under current law, those convicted of mob action may spend up to three years in prison. Tabares' bill allows a court to double the prison sentence - up to six years - of anyone convicted of using electronic communications to organize or commit a mob action. "We support this new law that provides police with the ability to hold people responsible when they use social networking to break the law," said Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy. The new law, Public Act 98-0014, takes effect Jan. 1st, 2014.
