School Districts

By Dr. R. Pletsch

The 2017 New Hampshire Secondary Principal of the Year, Brian Stack, has recently written about some of the best school districts nationwide and how they have redesigned their programs. He believes the article "Quality Counts, 2018: A Report Card for States and the Nation on K-12 Education" produced in EDUCATION WEEK. They state the two most important facts are preparation at home and the support at home needed to consider college as very young children. Some factors can be dealt with, but they see better schools have more educated parents are more likely to be two parent families with one of them choosing to stay home. Parents who actually speak to their chilally speak to their children produce better students. They don't nod at each other while they are looking at their phones, but actually talk in sentences. This, of course, is no surprise.

no surprise. Equitable school finance is the next. The perception of this throughout the state is important. This does not mean the exact same amount for every school. But each child, according to their circumstances have equal funds. For example, Special Ed stu-dents throughout the state should be given a certain amount in their school budget, as do different classifications of bilingual students and students who are below average getting the same amount of money so they can receive help. Each of these groups would have equal funding. Yet the budget for each school would be far from the same because the number of students in each of likely different. So you take all the groups and make those groups equal. The local school should understand that this is equity, not the silliness we hear in Illinois all the time. This has been accomplished according to Brian Stack in Massachusetts, New Jersey, New Hampshire and Connecticut, which his research points out as having some of the best districts for which the data is available.

Also cited in Education Week reporter, Daarel Burnette II, stated that high test scores in 4th grade seem to come from students that have had strong early childhood programs and these programs stretch literacy screening, not babysitting services. I believe one problem some districts have is that they are so stressed to make students get admission to the socalled top universities that they pay high school teachers more than elementary teachers and the districts seem to be incapable of seeing that this is not proper. We know certain kids will learn no matter who is in front of them and others will only learn with great staff members.

In my experience most educators understand that you deal with the kids you got, not the ones you wish you had. I received an award some years back for reading scores. My students were average kids and my staff had done a great job with them. But one of the with them. But one of the winning schools was from one of the selective enrollment high schools, the teachers booed because they understood that with the students at that school many, if not all, were self-motivated and had those scores before the staff ever saw
