By Dr. R. Pletsch

The issue of LGBTQ is as most things complicated and controversial. It is hard to make comments on this issue without sounding a bit judgemen-tal. There are several groups that argue about this issue often. A group of college students that I had a discussion with, mentioned that both LGBTQ and abortions never seem to come up on campus.

There are, of course, a few on the far left and the far right that always argue about everything. But these students told me that was not common on their campuses. These students are planning their futures and, of course, the subjects come up on occasion. The sim-ple thing they say about abortions is that they agree that very few people they know are 100% for abortion as many Democratic politicians demand. This group of students said they believe most of their friends have issues with how long in a pregnancy should abortions be permitted and the girl's age along with parent notification are issues they do talk about and hope to never be confronted with.

LGBTQ is an issue in some places more than recently been arguments in the Supreme Court as a group of Muslims, Catholics and Ethiopian Orthodox parents have a case against a county school board in Maryland. The issue is that the county, at one time, allowed the parents to opt out of the LGBTQ curriculum as the county does with sex education curriculum. The students told me that they have seen in the paper that parents were not saying others should not take the class, but that the county took the parental rights to opt their children out. Some argue it is a reli-gious rights issue. Others say it is teaching mutual respect while others claim the books are too graphic and that one book was even set for Pre-k, ages 3 and 4. This is something you probably need to read the books to form a solid opinion. I have not. These students are interested in the results because they are at the point of life where they are considering have they are considering hav-ing families. These young men and women plan to follow the law, but the issue that they really worry about is, where the state allows students born male to compete on girls' teams.

There are well documented cases of injuries that are probably caused by nature's natural muscle and strength issues. I let these students talk, I never asked what their faith was.But it seemed a non-issue with the students. Their hope is that the Supreme Court rules by what is correct, not their political party. If interested, the oral arguments in the Supreme Court are easy to look up.

They made them on April 15, 2025.
